

Smoke

Pre-publication - Advance reading copy. If Quentin Tarantino wrote Pulp Fiction, Smoke would be his novel. Vice cop, Eddie Fuentes, just got bounced from the Oakland PD, not an easy thing to do. For an encore, hes headed home to Redwood County to clean up some affairs for his dope grower dad, who just went off a bridge. The affairs start with a very sexy redhead by the name of Shanna Black. Shanna's a drug lawyer in the cross-hairs of a DEA investigation. She thinks Eddie could be part of her exit strategy, if she can get him to sell a piece of land to a Wall Street tycoon looking to clear-cut a stand of old growth redwood ... without tipping off a major dope grower client who doesn't like building roads. But before he can deal with that, Eddie's got some problems of his own, like a professional killer with a dead brother and an unforgiving mom. And, oh yeah, Eddie's pool hustler pal, a Mynot Indian, working on a little tribal development project called the Redwood Casino. Stir all this with a U.S. Attorney dying to improve her Wikipedia page, and what do you get? It could be the biggest asset seizure in U.S. drug enforcement history--but whos seizing what from whom? Lethal loggers, crooked cops, corporate connivers, adaptable environmentalists, the original Dr. Feelgood, and a Native American master of media optics-- they all face off in Redwood County, where the biggest industry is definitely -- SMOKE! Praise for SMOKE: How the hell did you get my phone number? (Elmore Leonard (to author Hank Shaeffer in 2012)
